YOUR INSTITUTE

The origin of the Institute could be traced to the keen desire of the first Prime Minister of India, Shri Jawaharlal Nehru to establish a Centre for futuristic thinking on Public Administration. It also sought to realize Dean Appleby's suggestion for establishing a Government-sponsored Institute of Public Administration for India, to provide a national, informal focussing of attention on the different facets of public administration.

Shri Jawaharlal Nehru chose to be the first President of the Institute and took active personal interest in its promotion and development. Over the years, the Institute has addressed itself to the four basic aspects of public administration, namely: (i) Research in public administration, and use of research findings towards improving and refining the administrative system, and socio-economic transformation, (ii) continuing training of civil servants and executives of public sector undertakings, etc., (iii) offering Consultancy and Support Service to Government Departments and organisations, and (iv) dissemination of information on public administration. In this pursuit, the Institute also organises seminars, conferences, colloquia, workshops, etc. Its main centre of activity has been at its headquarters in Delhi with a network of vibrant Regional and Local branches spread over different parts of the country.

The Institute has a faculty strength of 32 specializing in different disciplines of Public Administration, Economics, Management, Financial Management, Rural Studies, Behavioural Studies, Social Welfare Administration, Urban Studies, Computer Application, Justice, Environmental Studies, etc., duly supported by the administrative staff.

The Institute's affairs are guided by the Academic Committee, the Standing Committee and the Executive Council which is the highest body for overseeing the Institute's functioning. By tradition now, the Vice-President of India is the President of the Society and the President of India is the Patron.

What follows is the 43rd Annual Report of the Institute together with the audited Balance Sheet of the Indian Institute of Public Administration as on the 31st March, 1997 and the Income and Expenditure Account for the year 1996-97.

During the year under Review, the Institute, in pursuance of its objectives, has continued to extend and enlarge its research and consultancy activities. The studies undertaken were of a mixed nature, covering different facets of public administration. These included some commissioned by outside agencies and some initiated by the Institute. The Institute is at present engaged in the process of finalising its perspective plan on Research, Consultancy and Training, keeping in view the priorities of Government in the wake of globalisation and liberalization of economy.

Our training activities have also been varied. The number of training programmes has steadily increased over the years and it is now in the neighbourhood of 70 to 80 courses conducted every year with the participants numbering about 1,600-1,700. The Institute continues to take initiative in identifying and designing new courses. It has also responded to the requests of different ministries, State governments and agencies for conducting courses for their personnel. Proposals have been received from overseas institutions for establishing twinning arrangement for activities relating to training, research, etc. These are being pursued. In fact, a beginning in this respect was made in July, 1996, when the Institute organised a two-week workshop on Case Method exclusively for the academic staff of the Faculty of Law and Management, University of Mauritius.

Through its publications, including its Journals and monthly Newsletter, the Institute has succeeded in making its impact on its readership comprising the practising administrators, the academia and others. Though much of this impact is intangible, the spontaneous appreciation of the role of the Institute from various quarters is evidence enough of the usefulness and importance of our publications.

While continuing with our normal activities, our thrust in the coming years is to fully participate in the debate on restructuring Government with equity and transparency; forging strategic relationship with Departments/Ministries of the Centre and the States; having closer links with State Institutes of Public Administration and other sister institutions, also ensuring closer interaction with Regional and Local Branches. Countries of the world are coming closer and the concept of a global village having been floated, it would be imperative for the Institute to have closer interaction with similar institutions and agencies abroad. This also, IIPA would seek to achieve with a view to encapsulating the best of the emerging trends on public administration over the world. Within our limited resources, the Institute will ever strive towards greater excellence in the 21st Century.

Thirtythree officers from various All India and Central Services deputed by the Ministries/Departments of the Government of India, as also from State Governments participated in the programme.

APPPA has been designed to promote effective administrative leadership among senior/middle level officers. The programme seeks:

1. to provide an opportunity to middle and senior level civil servants to reflect upon their experiences;
2. to impart knowledge of recent developments in social science and their application in administration;
3. to acquaint the participants with the developments in administrative and management skills;
4. to enable the participants to make a critical analysis of the environmental and other factors impinging upon the functioning of the administrative system; and
5. to expose the participants to the complexities and issues involved in public policy, analysis and implementation in the Indian context.

The programme consisted of five broad components: (a) teaching courses, (b) field study, (c) study seminars, (d) computer practicals and (e) dissertation and viva-voce. All the activities in the programme were grouped into 23 streams consisting of a number of subjects/topics.

The programme also included experiential presentation by the participants. This aimed at developing their abilities to communicate and sharpen their confidence in public speaking and to equip them with the necessary techniques for oral presentation in the course of their assignments in the future.

As part of the programme, studies were carried out by the participants in groups in selected villages in districts of Jaipur (Rajasthan), North Goa (Goa), Mandla (Madhya Pradesh) and Kinnaur (Himachal Pradesh). On return, the participants discussed the experiences gained by them in a one-day seminar coordinated by Prof. R.K. Tiwari

The performance of the participants was evaluated through a system of written examinations, term papers/assignments, write-ups on research methods, experiential presentations, village study reports, foreign study reports, and evaluation of dissertation and viva-voce.

Shri Sumit Sinha, Additional Divisional Railway Manager, Eastern Railway, was awarded the Prof. V.K.N. Menon Prize for securing the first position among the participants in the programme. COMPLETED RESEARCH PROJECTS AND CONSULTANCY ASSIGNMENTS

A. RESEARCH PROJECTS

1. PARTICIPATORY MANAGEMENT OF PROTECTED AREAS

Society for Promotion of Wastelands Development and Ford Foundation sanctioned a grant of Rs.1,50,000 for undertaking this research project in the month of February, 1996 and the draft report was submitted in the month of August, 1996. Shri Ashish Kothari undertook this research study.

A. Background to Project

India's widespread network of protected areas (PAs, i.e., national parks and sanctuaries) has been the most ambitious and effective strategy of conserving India's wildlife and natural habitats. The process of setting up and managing these protected areas, however, has also resulted in severe problems for local communities dependent on their natural resources for livelihood and sustenance. Lack of consultation and meaningful communication with these communities, restrictions on their access to resources, and indifference to their traditions of resource conservation and use, has created considerable hostility, resulting in conflicts of various kinds. Long-term and effective conservation in such a situation is not possible. Over the last few years, national debate on the issue has increasingly focused on the need for a more participatory approach to conservation.

A series of meetings have been organised on this and related subjects in the last few years, including a national one on "Exploring the Possibilities of Joint Protected Area Management" at the Indian Institute of Public Administration in September 1994, and an Asian regional one on "Community-Based Conservation" held at IIPA in February 1997. In addition, IIPA has in the past conducted research work, and done networking, on the subject. The current project attempted to build on these initiatives.

B. Project Objectives

The project's major objective was to explore the possibilities of participatory or joint management in India's protected areas, and in particular examine the following :

- (i) The relationship between local communities and official conservation attempts.
- (ii) Appropriate institutional structures which could conserve and manage a protected area, taking in fully the rights and needs of local communities.
- (iii) The legal and policy implications of joint protected area management (JPAM), including possible changes in the Wild Life (Protection) Act.
- (iv) The precise sharing of rights, responsibilities, powers, and functions, that each partner in a participatory or joint management approach could have.
- (v) The possible benefits that local communities could get within and adjacent to the PAs.
- (vi) The processes by which a joint management strategy could be implemented.

C. Project Methodology

The above objectives were sought to be achieved by a mix of methods, including :

- (i) Collection and analysis of available secondary literature, especially related to a critical examination of past and existing institutional structures, and to the concept and practice of protected areas.
- (ii) Field visits to some sites. The three protected areas chosen for this were Rajaji National Park (U.P.), Kailadevi Sanctuary of the Ranthambhor Tiger Reserve (Rajasthan), and Dalma Sanctuary (Bihar).
- (iii) Personal dialogue and consultation with a range of people and agencies, including forest and wildlife officials, conservationists, social activists, researchers, lawyers, community representatives, and district administration officials.
- (iv) Informal group meetings in some sample areas, where the problems and prospects of PA management were discussed with local community groups.
- (v) Workshops between the various 'stakeholders' in each area.
- (vi) The involvement of a number of outside consultants, both within and outside Delhi, to continuously enrich the Project Team's own experiences and expertise.

D. Project Outputs

The project outputs include the following :

- Document 1 : Project Overview
- Document 2 : Key Issues in Joint Protected Area Management
- Document 3 : Kailadevi Sanctuary, Rajasthan : Prospects for Joint Management
- Document 4 : Dalma Wildlife Sanctuary, Bihar : Prospects for Joint Management
- Document 5 : Rajaji National Park, Uttar Pradesh : Prospects for Joint Management
- Document 6 : New Directions for India's Wildlife Legislation
- Document 7 : Protected Areas in India : Proposal for an Expanded System of Categories
- Document 8 : People's Involvement in Protected Areas: Experiences from Abroad and Lessons for India
- Document 9 : Bibliography on Conservation and People

Several issues of JPAM Update, a bi-monthly newsletter giving news about protected areas and people, which is sent to about 300 individuals and groups.

Apart from this, the project also entailed considerable networking with other interested groups and individuals, including servicing of their specific needs related to protected areas and people. The workshops held in Kailadevi and Dalma, in association with local NGOs, helped to get various stakeholders together to discuss the future of the respective protected areas in relation to the needs of the local people. As follow-up, the respective state governments are considering the resulting recommendations. A seminar being organised by the Ranthambhor Tiger Reserve authorities in August 1997, will be considering the results of the Project work in Kailadevi Sanctuary in detail. The Government of India's Project Elephant is also considering the results of the work in Rajaji National Park and Dalma Sanctuary.

2. SUSTAINABLE FOOD SECURITY IN BANGLADESH

This study was undertaken by IIPA and sponsored by United Nations Food and Agricultural Organisation. Prof. K.N. Kabra conducted the Research Project.

For a country like Bangladesh meeting the challenge of food security, the need for growing farm production and productivity (of both land and labour) in a sustainable manner, i.e., without sacrificing long-run interests and capabilities, with cost price behaviour in harmony with the prevalent and emerging income and expenditure patterns, particularly of the food insecure groups, controlling excessive volatility in production, prices, and composition of the food basket, and regional balance cannot be overemphasised. For the specific conditions of Bangladesh, the policies and programmes have to respond to a number of important issues. Though food security becomes operationally relevant at the household level, the question of intra-household allocation of food is no less important, especially for its gender dimension. Similarly, the vulnerability of deeply flood-prone and, cyclone-prone regions along the sea coast and internal water courses and, of the North to droughts is especially great. Bangladesh experience two lean seasons (the hungry months of March-April and September-October), every year, giving the question of food security a specific seasonal dimension. Regular recourse to food imports in order to meet the food gap have to be viewed in the context of persistent investment savings gap, trade deficit, heavy burden of external debt, huge debt-servicing ratio and heavy weight of a few products (jute and garments) among her exportables. Overall many physical spatial, material and demographic, social and economic factors buffet the food security of Bangladesh. The proposition, "Perhaps the starkest, most startling consequence of poverty in Bangladesh is that fully half the country's population cannot afford an adequate diet" (Working Group on Targeted Food Intervention, 1993, 1) captures only the generality of the phenomenon and leaves out some highly specific critical elements of food insecurity in Bangladesh.

In addition to the specifics seen above, another one concerns the link between food consumption and nutrition, owing to the fact that "a major constraint to conversion of food into nutrition is the widespread incidence of intestinal and other diseases in Bangladesh", (Ghafur, Abdul, 1990, 66-67). This factor, though difficult to quantify, is brought out clearly from the data on the incidence of common communicable diseases in Bangladesh, (Karim, E., 1996) which remains high as a cumulative result of a mix of climatic, behavioural, economic and topographical factors.

Thus the question of food security in Bangladesh is concerned as much with the adequacy and growth of overall food supply, underlined on account of high income elasticity of demand and weight of food in overall consumption expenditure, as with the limited, wavering and shaky ability of millions of poor households the landless, small and marginal farmers, the artisans, etc., who constituted in 1976-77 some 43.24 per cent of total households, (Mujeri and others, 1993, 233) and the majority of urban informals — to access food. A contribution in the same direction is made on account of the combined effects of income, price and distributional factors. It is true that now the spectre of starvation deaths like the one witnessed in 1943 and in 1974 famines no longer stalks Bangladesh, though the fear of such a catastrophe continues to haunt and, given the fury of cyclones and floods, to an extent, does occasionally become a grim reality, accentuating food insecurity (Hossain and others, quote a New York Times report which maintains that "poverty, more than weather, is the killer". 1992, 238). Thus attainment of food security at the macro and micro levels remains a constant concern of public policy and international community. The present exercise is concerned with various issues involved in ensuring sustainable food security in Bangladesh, as they evolve after the first Food Summit in 1974 and explore the prospects of regional cooperation on these issues among the South Asian countries.

On the basis of the foregoing examination of food security issues in Bangladesh, it seems to us that the following areas may well be explored for mutually beneficial national self-reliance fostering regional cooperation in SAARC Member States:

- (i) Flood control, drainage and water resource management. Cooperation between upper riparian and lower riparian states with similar economic structure, low land-man ratio and vulnerability to natural disasters cannot be overemphasised. Joint action in weather monitoring and forecasting would help farm level planning, development of fisheries, and flood prevention measure.
- (ii) Buffer stocks, both of foodgrains and major modern farm inputs, are a crucial element in inter-temporal food security. The simple logic that larger the unit for which buffer is maintained, lower the cost suggests a fruitful arena is regional co-operation.
- (iii) R&D in farming, including eco-farming, genetics, post harvest technology and environmental problems for countries facing similar issues and constraints need exploration.
- (iv) Common policy experience, under 'Green Revolution', SAP, anti-poverty programmes, etc., provide great scope for learning and innovations. This may also pave the way for evolving a common stand on issues like WTO.
- (v) Trade in food and non-food products, particularly in the context of adjustments necessitated by WTO may be a relatively more difficult area in which cooperation can be initiated. But with initiatives like SAPTA, a gradual approach building on the experience of informal border trade, may provide useful clues.

3. PERSONALITY AND CONDITIONING OF WOMEN ADMINISTRATORS

IIPA sanctioned an amount of Rs.5,000 to Dr. (Mrs.) Lipi Mukhopadhyay for undertaking this Case Study in 1993-94 and the report was submitted in the month of May 1996.

Objectives of the Study

- (i) Objectives of the Study: whether Personality and perception of women are influenced by sociological reasons, rearing practices, family, etc., and their likely impact on work behaviour.
- (ii) Methodology: Survey based research study administered questionnaire and engaged interview with Lady IAS Officers of Delhi, Haryana, Rajasthan and UP.
- (iii) Major Findings: It does influence the personality and overall attitudes/perception of women in general. In administration gender role and perception of others influence work behaviour of lady IAS Officers.

- (iv) Major Recommendations: Irrespective of gender issues women employees should be placed and promoted on the basis of their credentials and ability in job performance.

4. ADMINISTRATIVE WELFARE SERVICE: A COMPARATIVE STUDY OF GOVERNMENT AND NGOs IN DELHI

IIPA sanctioned an amount of Rs.40,000 to Dr. M.K. Narain to undertake this Research Project in the month of December 1994 and the report was submitted in the month of March, 1997.

Summary of the Report

The study was designed to look into the problems of implementation of a few welfare services run by government as well as non-governmental organisations related to health, vocational training and dowry with the objective to study organisational structure, financial resources, process of delivery system, reactions of beneficiaries about the services and suggestions for improvement.

The methodology of the study consisted of selection of Anti Dowry Cell, vocational training and health (ICDS) units of Delhi Administration and similar organisations run by NGO. In total, 18 officials and 53 beneficiaries and 17 officials and 62 beneficiaries belonging to government and non-governmental organisations were interviewed with the help of an interview schedule.

Findings

The main findings included, both types of organisation identified needs of the client through survey. The NGO organisations were having detailed surveys than government organisations. The beneficiaries of both organisations changed Institutions due to dissatisfaction of services. The Government and NGO differed in delivery of services; the NGO services were more systematically planned than government thus received non-cooperation from beneficiaries. There was lack of feed-back about the services in government organisation. There was also lot of scope to develop NGO organisation to share burden of Government.

5. DEVELOPMENT AND ECOLOGICAL ROLE OF NEEM IN INDIA

The IIPA was entrusted with the task of undertaking a secondary material based quick study on the development and ecological role of neem tree by the Neem Foundation, Mumbai. Prof. K.N. Kabra conducted the Research Project.

Overview

There are about 20 million neem trees in India. Under favourable conditions fresh fruit yield per fully grown tree is about 50 kg per year. If 50 per cent are accessible and tapped, the total annual neem seed production may well reach the level of 5 lakh tonnes. The present level of collection is about 25 to 30 per cent which shows the potential for additional employments and income generation. This is just one use. Since every part of neem tree has a multiplicity of vital and valuable uses, its total potential in fields as diverse as agriculture, forestry, agro-forestry, pesticides, increasing fertilizers nitrogen efficiency, birth control, environmental upgradation, medicine, wasteland development and rural industries is immediate.

Because of poor quality of seeds and their weak bargaining position, the seed collectors income is in the range of Rs.500 to Rs.2500 per ton of seeds, giving a total value in the neighbourhood of Rs.100 crore. As a part-time supplementary income if a poor villager is able to tap 100 neem trees in a year, an additional income flow of Rs.10,000 per annum can be earned. With the modest target of reaching 50 per cent of the tree population, this kind of additional income just by seed collection can be given to one lakh persons. Better quality seed would fetch upto Rs.4,000 per ton which would double our estimates of neem potential.

The best way to popularise the use of neem products is through neem growing demonstration centres and bridging the gap between labs and farmers. Government, non-government organisations, can provide training to villagers for preparation of various neem products. This activity could usefully be added to TRYSEM. Care is needed in selecting trainees under TRYSEM. They should be people already connected with the activity or with an assurance that training will be put to practical use. Government and non-government organisations can also provide assistance for setting up of small scale units in rural areas for oil extraction and simple pesticidal preparations.

What is presently a less popular phenomenon is the systematic planting of neem trees. In this respect, systematic and vigorous efforts are needed by way of individual initiative by farmers, landless rural workers, horticulturists, rural artisans, unemployed youth and forest-related interests. Planned planting and propagation of neem trees mainly as a subsidiary viable economic activity has to be encouraged. The public intervention for this purpose has to be mainly by way of publicity, extension, availability of saplings, R&D, co-ordination, etc.

The organised sector has to play a more focussed role in setting up R&D facilities for neem and neem-based products.

The reported decision by the Ministry of Environment and Forests, Government of India, to set up a Neem Board may go a long way if it does not become a centralised monolith concentrating all powers, resource and responsibilities at the Centre. What is required is its role as a central catalytic co-ordinating and monitoring organisation. It should help local agencies to plan and implement programmes for propagating neem and neem-based activities. It could provide assistance to the lower planning and administrative agencies without stifling local initiatives. An eminently viable activity like one based on the neem tree, with all its backward and forward linkages, requires recognition, help and removal of hurdles rather than creation of vested interests by the institution of subsidies.

What needs to be stressed is that it is both possible and desirable to integrate the neem from plantation to utilisation with a number of on going rural development programmes, like, IRDP, Employment Assurance Scheme, DPAP, DDP, wasteland development, JRY, etc.

If banks could lend against the security of neem tree and stocks of neem products at different stages of production, the capacity of the resource limited entrepreneurs to make use of neem for self-employment would go up. Organising neem or Vriksha co-operatives or Vriksha Sena can also help the poor in pooling their resources. TRYSEM can provide critical, employment related inputs. Neem Research units in AFRI, Forest and Agriculture research centres, pesticides and fertiliser units as well as universities, scientific laboratories at many levels and in co-ordination with those connected with neem may be profitably set up. Demonstration units for neem-based products in these centres could be an effective tool of extension. Social Advertising on electronic and print media (both official and non-official) especially in Indian languages, can take the message of neem to every hamlet, village and home.

Neem based industries are eminently suitable for meeting both the local needs, using local resources and linking up in a symbiotic manner with a number of other rural activities and industries. India has a vast fund of traditional technological knowledge about neem products, it is time the traditional processes and equipment for producing neem products are tried on actual, commercial scale and 'learning by doing' is used for further improvements and economic use.

Economically sound and viable resource like neem needs say positive incorporation on merits in our plans and policies.

Neem has too strong a case for itself to need any artificial props. The need is just to adopt it, propagate it and will carve out a niche for itself.

6. RESCUE, RELIEF AND REHABILITATION IN MAHARASHTRA EARTHQUAKE

This Research Project was sanctioned by the IIPA in 1994 and project report was submitted in the month of March 1997. Dr. M.K. Narain coordinated the Research Project. Total sanctioned amount for this project was Rs. 40,000.

The earthquake in Maharashtra occurred on November 30, 1993 and the most affected districts were Latur and Osmanabad. The study was conducted in the same districts in Maharashtra in which 67 villages were damaged, 8000 people died due to collapse of housing structure and property worth of lakhs were damaged. The objectives of the study were: (a) to study organizational structure for rescue-relief and rehabilitation, financial aids, problem of coordination, role of NGO and reaction of victims.

Methodology

The methodology for the study included discussion with the officials, non-officials and victims with the help of a interview schedule, at centre, state, block, tehsil and village level of two selected villages each in Latur and Osmanabad districts. Apart from this, NGO were also contacted for their reactions. In total 451 respondents were interviewed included officials, non-officials, public leaders, NGO and households.

Findings

The study found time gap between occurrence of disaster and help received by victims. Lack of coordination among various agencies, dissatisfaction about distribution of relief material, hindrance in relief efforts due to VIP movements, theft, community shelter, allotment of shelter, role of media, lack of transparency in dissemination of information to the needy.

7. RURAL SANITATION: THE MEDINIPUR MODEL – A CASE STUDY

Dr. Jaytilak Guha Roy conducted the case study which was sponsored by Ministry of Rural Areas and Employment, Government of India. The sanctioned grant for the project was Rs.15,000. The Research Project was submitted in the month of August 1996 and the report was submitted in the month of March 1997.

Objective

To review the laudable role played by Panchayats and NGOs in Rural Sanitation.

Major Findings

- (i) This was an intensive sanitation project based on an alternative, integrated approach.
- (ii) It was not confined to construction and maintenance of latrines but also sought to develop a fully integrated support system to sustain practices related to hygiene, home and environmental sanitation.
- (iii) It was a fully self-sustaining project relying on mobilisation and intermediation in communities through Panchayats and NGOs rather than on subsidy.
- (iv) It was based on holistic development of sanitation as a total package.
- (v) It made full cost recovery possible by making technology options affordable and acceptable.
- (vi) This case study demonstrates how the Project could achieve its physical targets with self-sustainability without having a target-oriented approach in the traditional manner.

8. RURAL BANKING AND SERVICE AREA APPROACH

The study was conducted by Dr. A. Sarada and was funded by IIPA.

Objective of the Study

The Service Area Approach to rural lending lays emphasis on micro level planning at the branch levels and incorporates all the refinements found necessary by years of experience in the credit planning process. The main objective of the study is to make a performance appraisal of Service Area Approach in terms of improvements in the identification of beneficiaries for assistance and identification of projects/schemes etc., improvements in loan disbursements, loan recovery etc; improvements in coordination among line agencies, and monitoring of projects/schemes and finally appraisal of the staff capabilities and skills for effective operationalisation of this Approach.

Methodology

The study was conducted in Thrumalaya Palem Block of Khamman District of Andhra Pradesh. All bank branches operating in the Block were selected for the study besides the bank officials, the government officials at the Block level, Lead Bank officials, NABARD officials and DRDA officials at the District level and a few beneficiaries from each bank branch numbering 90 were interviewed for the study. A combination of interview, observations, verification of records was used for filling in the pre-structured schedules.

Major Findings and Suggestions

The method of linking bank credit plans to development plans under this approach has resulted in correct identifications of schemes and activities, and capable beneficiaries of those schemes. Beneficiaries are now more aware that unless they repay their previous loans they cannot approach the bank or any other agency for further loans. Recovery position is improving. Coordination between bankers and other like agencies is lacking especially in providing linkages and loan recovery. There should be a joint training of bankers as well as the officials of the coordinating agencies on an intensive scale for improving the skills of identifying the rural capabilities and problems and issues of coordination

9. DEPOSIT MOBILISATION BY RURAL CREDIT INSTITUTIONS : THE CASE OF PRIMARY AGRICULTURAL CREDIT SOCIETIES

This Research Project was sanctioned by the IIPA in the month of April 1989 and Project report was submitted in the month of September 1996. Shri Pranab Banerji was Faculty Incharge of this Project. Total sanctioned amount for this project was Rs.20,000.

The study develops a theoretical framework to explain rural deposit mobilisation and puts it to empirical testing. Besides giving a descriptive account of deposit mobilisation by Primary Agricultural Credit Societies (PACS) in India and a brief survey of the literature on rural deposit mobilisation in developing countries, the study attempts to construct a theoretical model of peasant-household deposit behaviour, followed by an econometric analysis of the factors that have affected the growth of deposits of the PACS in the country.

The results show that the effectiveness of financial liberalisation policies in rural deposit mobilisation may be limited as rural deposits are not responsive to interest rates; instead, these are highly responsive to the physical expansion of financial institutions. It also shows, that in the context of peasant-household decision-making, a very high deposit rate may, in fact, lower farm investment by peasant households.

B. CONSULTANCY ASSIGNMENTS

1. COST OF BUSINESS TRANSACTED AT PARLIAMENT – CONSULTANCY ASSIGNMENT

The Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs, Government of India gave a consultancy assignment to workout the cost of Business Transacted at Parliament. The assignment led to designing of a methodology to workout cost of a Business Transacted at Parliament. Considering the laid out procedure for drafting of a bill—official as well as non-official—and for enactment of legislation, and also the existing system of account heads and record keeping, three alternative approaches were designed to workout the cost of business transacted. Cost per hour of business transacted in each House was adopted as the basis for estimation of cost for business transacted. Alternatively cost per hour of each House as well as of each Committee was used as the basis. Total number of business hours 'Budgeted' for each House and for various Committees were recommended as the parameter for estimation of cost per hour. Cost centre concept approach was recommended as another approach to ascertain the cost; and centres or divisions, each contributing, directly or indirectly, to the performance of a business were to be identified from the two Houses of the Parliament.

2. RECASTING INDICES FOR DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Dr. Aasha Kapur Mehta conducted the present Consultancy Assignment which was sponsored by Karnataka Women's Information and Resource Centre together with National Commission for Women and UNDP Human Development Report Office, New York. The sanctioned grant for this consultancy assignment was Rs.10,000. The grant was made available in the month of February 1996 and the final document was submitted in the month of October 1996.

Objectives of the Study

- (i) To look at the HDR of the UNDP critically as also its assumptions, measuring devices and ranking and construct alternative indices and evolve guidelines for future HDRs.

- (ii) Plan and Steer an International Technical Workshop on 'Building a Framework for Measuring Gender Equity'. Analysed the Gender Empowerment Measure developed by the UNDP. Constructed alternate indices of gender empowerment for 16 states of India including representation at the Panchayat level and exercising the right to vote.

Major Findings and Recommendations

The UNDP's Human Development Report uses various indicators to rank countries on the basis of their performance in the sphere of human development. These indicators include the human development index (HDI), the gender development index, (GDI) and the gender empowerment measure (GEM).

The Director, UNDP Human Development Report Office, New York and KWIRC co-sponsored an International Technical Workshop on the Human Development Report at Bangalore in May, 1996. The objective was to put together a group of 18 professionals and experts from different parts of the world to look at the Human Development Report of the UNDP critically, as also its assumptions, measuring devices and ranking, construct alternative indices and evolve guidelines for future HDRs.

The task for this assignment was to :

- (i) plan and steer the workshop
- (ii) analyse the Gender Empowerment Measure in terms of the inadequacies of the index and use a third world perspective to construct an alternate GEM for India.

UNDP's GEM seeks to determine the degree to which men and women participate actively in professional, political and economic activity and take part in decision-making.

Specifically, the HDR measures GEM on the basis of indices pertaining to the following three variables:

- (i) Power over economic resources, measured by per capita income.
- (ii) Access to professional activities and participation in economic decision-making based on share of jobs in the professional, technical, managerial and administrative category.
- (iii) political opportunities and decision-making reflected by share of parliamentary seats.

The 1995 HDR, estimates GEM for 116 countries and notes that only nine countries have GEM values above 0.60 while 24 countries have values below 0.25.

While such an index may reasonably reflect the level of relative disparities in empowerment in the West, it is inadequate in the context of the Third World in that it captures a very small segment of the population.

Three alternate indices of gender empowerment were constructed for 16 states of India, based on the following indicators:

- representation in the Lok Sabha
- representation in the State Legislature
- representation in the Gram Panchayat
- representation in the Panchayat Samiti
- representation in the Zilla Parishad
- literacy rate
- exercising the right to vote
- life expectancy
- per capita income

The analysis clearly shows that :

- (i) affirmative action in terms of the constitutional amendments has had a tremendous impact on reducing the inequalities in political representation at the levels of the Gram Panchayat, Panchayat Samiti and Zilla Parishad.
- (ii) male-female inequality is almost non-existent when measured in terms of the electorate exercising the right to vote. In other words, where one segment of society does not "take away" from another, differentials are low.
- (iii) gender differentials are very high in terms of the income index.
- (iv) the scores and ranks attained by the different states for each of the variables reveal gender-based disparities that can be meaningfully used by policy makers and analysts.
- (v) looking only at the average of different indices results in significant loss of information. More useful comparisons can be drawn from a vector of indices.
- (vi) lack of accurate data especially gender-desegregated data is another area that needs attention.

The scores and ranks attained by different states for each of these variables could be meaningfully used by policy makers and analysts.

Outcomes

- (i) The results were presented and discussed at an international technical workshop on "Building a Framework for Measuring Gender Equity" held at Bangalore in May, 1996. The paper entitled "Recasting Indices for Developing Countries: A Gender Empowerment Measure" was published in the Economic and Political Weekly, October 26, 1996.

- (ii) A coauthored report covering the papers prepared for the workshop is being published.

3. RURAL WOMEN'S DEVELOPMENT AND EMPOWERMENT PROJECTS

The consultancy on Rural Women's Development and Empowerment Project was sponsored by the (World Bank Resident Commission, in the month of July 1996 and report was submitted in the month of September 1996. This consultancy assignment was undertaken by Dr. Aasha Kapur Mehta.

Terms of Reference

- (i) to participate in the World Bank – MYRADA information dissemination workshop at Hasur on "Planning and Implementation of the Rural Womens Development and Empowerment Project", July 2-6, 1996.
- (ii) to attend the workshop on Monitoring at ISEC, Bangalore on July 5, 1996.
- (iii) to prepare the Terms of Reference for market surveys, techno-economic surveys and design consultancies to be used by the states implementing the project.

4. TRAINING NEEDS ASSESSMENT FOR MUNICIPAL AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITIES

The Ministry of Urban Affairs and Employment, Government of India sanctioned a grant of Rs.80,000 for undertaking this Research project in the month of July, 1995 and the report was submitted in the month of July, 1996. This research project was undertaken by Prof. Girish K. Misra.

Objectives of the Study

To assess the training needs of municipal and urban development agencies.

Major Findings

- (i) The study aimed at identifying training needs for municipal and urban development in view of the present requirements, like Constitution Amendment Act, Sustainable Development, Privatisation, etc.
- (ii) The case study of GBMC (Greater Bombay Municipal Corporation) has shown the specific training requirements of various officials – senior and middle level in administration, personnel and accounts departments of the Corporation.

- (iii) The continuing programme of training and information to support training courses has been suggested.

Recommendations

- (i) The need for in-house training centres or units in municipal corporations has been established, GBMC has one such unit.
- (ii) The participation of NGO's voluntary agencies and private sector in municipal development works has been brought out.
- (iii) Available training facilities should be utilized.
- (iv) Education in training in municipal development should be imparted in universities and institutions of public administration.
- (v) Motivation for training and application of knowledge gained should be provided by municipal corporations in the country.
- (vi) Based on the case study of GBMC, the training needs assessment (TNA) in the country for municipal and urban development should be undertaken by IIPA to provide more realistic basis.

5. ECODEVELOPMENT

The IIPA was requested by the Ministry of Environment and Forests, Government of India, to coordinate the preparation of the project proposal on ecodevelopment for possible funding by the World Bank and the Global Environment Facility (GEP). The cost of preparation was met by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Shri Shekhar Singh conducted this consultancy assignment.

As the co-ordinating agency, the tasks undertaken by the IIPA included the following:

1. Development of the concept of ecodevelopment.
2. Assisting the MOEF in identifying the sites that were to be taken up under the ecodevelopment project.
3. Identification of individual national consultants and other national and regional NGOs, and institutions who could assist in the project formulation.
4. Developing the terms of reference and supervising the work of these national consultants and participating NGOs and institutions.
5. Developing indicative plans for each of the sites selected.
6. Developing a comprehensive country proposal, based on the indicative plans developed for each of the selected sites, and including indicative budgets, details of monitoring and evaluation systems, proposed institution and structure, and a plan for research.

7. To discuss the proposed country plan with various experts and stake holders both within and outside the government, at the national, state, district and village levels.
8. To finalise the country proposal and assist the Government of India in negotiating with the World Bank and the GEF for financial support.

The outputs of the assignment are briefly described below:

1. The concept of ecodevelopment was developed in a participatory manner and got approved from the Ministry of Environment and Forests. Briefly, ecodevelopment is:

- An approach at conserving ecologically sensitive areas, especially national parks and sanctuaries;
- Conserving them in a way in which the local communities dependent on these areas for their basic needs are provided appropriate alternative sources of biomass and incomes.
- Planning and implementing such activities in a participatory manner which is site specific and micro level.
- Setting up institutions to sustain ecodevelopment activities and to involve the local communities in the management of national parks and sanctuaries.
